Not illustrated. 1878-01-01 Excerpt: ... long ago (S. F., III., 10), the real total will not, I apprehend, be ultimately found to fall short of 1,000 species. In conclusion, I would urge that, imperfect as this account is, I have really (as I have above endeavoured to show) tried my best to make it as useful and complete as was possible with the defective materials and the scanty leisure at my command. case (a few are doubtful) good reasons for believing to occur in Burmah, or which are represented there by nearly allied species, not discriminated when Blyth wrote and not included in the list. Our present total of 71 shows an advance of nearly 200 species. Subsequent to the entire revised list (which has been some seven months in type) being printed off, and to the whole of this introduction being in type, some 600 odd specimens, collected chiefly about the base of Nwalubo in the Tavoy district, have been received. These show how impossible it is at present to generalize safely as to distribution; many species have turned up at Nwalabo that have not hitherto been observed so far north or south, as the case maybe, by, in some instances, a hundred miles or so; some of the more important points suggested by this collection are noticed in Appendix I, Addenda et Corrigenda. REVISED LIST. 2.--Otogyps calvus, Scop. Observed near Moulmein by Captain Bingham, and by Mr. Davison about Malewoou; a specimen was also examined by Davison, but unfortunately not preserved, which had been shot by Mr. L. Hough, near the head waters of the Pakchan. 4.--Gyps indicus, Scop. The late Captain Beavan (P. Z. S., 1866, p. 3) recorded specimens of this Vulture as observed at Zwagaben, commonly known as the Duke of Yorks Nose, a limestone rock, about 25 miles north of Moulmein. He does not appear to have procured spe...
