Not illustrated. 1901 edition. Excerpt: ...With a frontispiece in photogravure after a drawing by Sir J. E. Millais, P.R.A., and photogravure plates, two coloured plates and fifty illustrations from the authors drawings and from photographs. (London: Longmans, Green, and Co., 1901.) 30s.net. Mr. Millais new volume is a valuable contribution to the literature of sport and natural history, and is, moreover, the first work ever devoted to Scottish wildfowl and wildfowling. There is no one more competent to handle this subject than Mr. Millais; for it has been, as he tells us, his special study from very early years. When I first began wildfowling along the coasts of Scotland, he writes, I was but a small boy of eleven, with an insatiable craze for natural history. I must find out for myself the haunts and habits of every wild animal in the country, beginning with sea-fowl; must shoot and collect specimens, and must dissect them in order to learn their anatomy. Taking as a starting-point the south-east corner of Scotland, Mr. Millais worked steadily northward, and for years afterwards holidays were devoted to continuing the exploration; so that by the time he was sixteen he had three times walked over the whole distance from Dunbar in the south to Thurso in the north, omitting only such portions of the coast-line as consisted of inaccessible cliffs. In the course of these rambles, specimens of most of the British wildfowl were collected, in their various stages and conditions of plumage; and in after years, when punt and swivel-gun replaced the light 20-bore of earlier trips, it was still Mr. Millais chief object to secure for his collection such specimens as were necessary to render it complete. These years of hard, and often dangerous, work,
