

Fauna Boreali-Americana; or, The Zoology of the Northern Parts of British America: Containing Descriptions of the Objects of Natural History Collected ... Library Collection - Zoology) (Volume 3)

Sir John Richardson (1787-1865), surgeon, naturalist and Arctic explorer, went on Sir John Franklins first two Arctic expeditions as ships doctor and naturalist, and made observations and collected a large number of plant and animal specimens from the Canadian Arctic. On his return to England after the second expedition he began to write this four-volume work of natural history, first published between 1829 and 1837. A volume is dedicated to each of the classes of mammal, bird, fish and insect, which are found in the Canadian Arctic. This work is an interesting example of pre-Darwinian natural history, full of detailed descriptions of the appearance, anatomy and behaviour of the different species. Volume 3 was first published in 1836 and is devoted to the species of fish found in the Canadian Arctic. It contains many detailed illustrations, and discussions of the similarities between different species of fish.
