

Sea to Summit: One Mans Pleasure in Scotlands Wildlife

This selection of images of creatures to be seen in Scotland, is the product of the authors enthusiasm for his native countrys wild places and the things that live there. Compiled from images collected over a dozen years since his retirement from the world of education the text outlines his belief that in this digital age, through publication of their photographic work, many amateurs like himself can help introduce and inform people in Scotland, and visitors from abroad, about the natural world that lies in many cases not far from their doorsteps His particular interest in species such as mountain hare, ptarmigan and snow bunting give a clue as to his favourite places in Scotland and his photograpic images of these species have seldom been bettered. His love of the high ground is apparent too from the number of the plants illustrated which belong to the moorlands and hills. His fascination with the shorelands is well illustrated in his images of shorebirds, from those to be found wading in sandy places to those that cling to the cliffs of Scotlands well known seabird colonies. The accompanying audio CD does not duplicate the books contents but provides a complementary description of Scottish habitats through twelve sound pictures or soundscapes mixed from recordings made from the Atlantic to the North Sea. Particular atmospheric are the tracks of corncrakes calling all around the stereo picture on the outer island of Barra or the chorus of Roe Deer barking in a Strathspey woodland. Neither the book nor CD are exhaustive in their selection of images and sounds leaving many more species for the nature watcher, and listener to seek out inspired by this unique collection of images and sounds from the Scottish landscape. And for the visitor from far away here is an ideal, compact distillation of some of Scotlands beautiful wildlife to take home and through which to recall so much of what makes Scotland and its wildlife special.
