Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: ... A CHAMBERED MOUND NEAR BRECKNESS, STROMNESS, ORKNEY. By M. M. CHARLESON, F.S.A. Scot. IN the summer of 1900, by the kind permission of W. G. T. Watt, Esq. of Skail, I commenced the excavation of a large mound on the farm of Westerleafea, near Breckness, in Outertown, Stromness. There was no room for doubt as to the artificiality of the mound, which, apart from its symmetry and surroundings, had previously supplied a neighbouring farmer with a quantity of material for building purposes, these operations, more properly depredations, leaving a gap on the south side of the mound in which several upright slabs of some size were noticeable. At this point we began the excavation, and before long struck a low wall between two upright slabs which projected from it and which were 6 feet apart. In the middle of this wall, that is, between the two upright slabs, an opening was found, and this led to a passage running inwardly for a few feet, and roofed over with large transverse slabs. At the inner end of this passage, the interior wall branched sharply to right and left, and in following it up on the right we found that it extended first in an easterly and then in a northerly and westerly direction, ending in a large recess which subsequently proved to be of equal height with the wall exposed. The outline of the structure being thus far laid bare, the excavation was carried on in a downward direction, beginning at the entrance. At a depth of five feet from the surface of the mound a floor was discovered, together with a lateral recess off the east side of the building. This floor, however, proved to be secondary, for, at a depth of a foot, another and evidently primary one was found, the debris between the two consisting of black unctuous earth intermixed with animal...
