

The Way to Christ, Described in the Following Treatises (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Way to Christ, Described in the Following Treatises The materials available for describing the Life of Jacob Boehme are but scanty, consisting for the most part of a few surprising incidents, some of which, were they not so well authenticated and narrated by himself, would be deemed to be fabulous and incredible - and these incidents, more or less paraphrased, have had to serve for the purpose of a Biography by successive Editors of his Works. Jacob Boehme, though by trade a Shoemaker, was a very remarkable man, and became the greatest Theosopher that has ever lived. His writings are not to be understood without considerable effort working in spiritual sympathy with his ideas, consequently, they have proved to be foolishness to multitudes, and but few have discovered, what has been called, the Pearl hidden within them. Of Jacob Boehmes birth and parentage, it is known that he was born in the year 1575 at Alt or Old, Seidenberg, a small market-town in Northern Germany, now situated at the confines of the Prussian frontier; and within two miles of the principal town of Goerlitz, which at that time was a place of much importance, and still forms a considerable business centre, He was named after his father, and his Mothers name was Ursula; of whom he was not their only child, although neither the names of the other children nor any allusion to them beyond a dead brother, appears to be recorded. As a boy he was employed with other lads to tend the cattle and such similar occupation, as could be found for him near home. Even at that age he appears to have been of a pensive and dreamy disposition and much inclined to reverie; nor was he of a robust form of constitution: to which even in manhood, he did not attain. One of the earliest recorded incidents of Jacobs life is that which occurred to him while herding the cattle. It is narrated that one day at noon, having left his companions to look after the herd, he went to a hill close by called the Lands Crown, where a formation of the rock bore some resemblance to a cave, where, finding an opening through the brushwood, he entered, and saw a large wooden vessel filled with money: the sight of which so alarmed him that he ran back to his companions and told them of the occurrence; but although they at once returned with him, both the entrance and the fairy-like money had disappeared.
