On the Dimorphism of Baryto-calcite. By James F. W. Johnston, Esq., M.A., F.R.S.E d., F.G.S., Sfc, Reader in Chemistry and Mineralogy in the University of Durham, nPHE substance first examined crystallographically and de-- scribed as a new mineral species by Mr. Brooke, under the name of Baryto-calcite, is now well known to mineralogists, and is to be ipet with in most cabinets. It has a specific gravity of 366, according to Mr. Children, and its form, by the measurements of Mr. Brooke, is an oblique rhombic prism Mon M= 106 51 ,M on P102 54 .S ince the discovery of the principle of dimorphism, more particularly since the analysis of the plumbo-calcite enabled me to class the carbonate of lead with that of lime as isodimorphous bodies, I have looked to this mineral with very considerable interest. If lime, barytes, strontian, and protoxide of lead constitute an isomorphous group, of which two are already observed to be czmorphous, we may naturally look for a similar property in the other two; we may expect the carbonates, for example, of barytes and strontian, either in their pure state, or in combination with another carbonate belonging to the same group, to crystallize in two or more incompatible forms. But the baryto-calcite measured by Mr. Brooke gave us none of that intbrmation we expected from it. The crystalline form was neither that of the carbonate of barytes in its usual form, nor that of the carbonate of lime in calc spar; it was neither a rhomboid nora right rhombic Communicated by the A uthor.
